Singapore's first 3D-printed braille book

A Decade of Innovation. A Commitment to Inclusion.

As NAMIC celebrates our 10th anniversary, we are grateful for the opportunity to contribute back to society through a CSR initiative that reflects our belief in innovation with purpose — Singapore's first 3D-printed braille book for young children with visual impairments. This braille book is built upon the know-how of NAMIC Hub@SIT, and the prints are supported by NAMIC hubs.

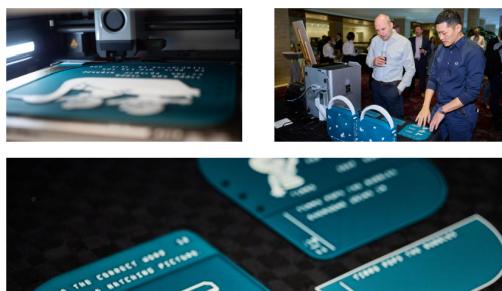

See how innovation and empathy come together to build a more inclusive Singapore.

Stories You Can Feel: The Power of Inclusive Innovation

Developed in collaboration with Tusitala, a local digital storytelling studio, and iC2 PrepHouse, a charity supporting children with visual impairments, the 3D-printed braille storybook was inspired by Timmy and Tammy at the Botanic Gardens by Ruth Wan-Lau and Eliz Ong.

Supported by DesignSingapore's Good Design Research (GDR) grant, the project brought together children, parents, and educators to co-create tactile books that integrate raised illustrations, textured elements and Braille Neue, a special typeface that combines braille and printed books, making reading a shared sensory experience between child and caregiver.

Thank You for Building a More Inclusive Singapore with Us
